Women's Health Courses

The UCSF Program for Women in Health Sciences, the only program of its type in the country, is sponsoring two community health education courses in San Francisco.

A class on "Women in Health" will begin on January 31 at John Adams Adult School, 1860 Hayes St., as part of the life science curriculum. This program is jointly sponsored by the UCSF Women in Health Sciences program and the San Francisco Community College District.

An eight-week class on "Women's Self-Health" will be taught by the staff of the San Francisco Women's Health Center at the downtown YWCA on Sutter Street, beginning on January 24, and will be held on Tuesday evenings from 5:30 to 7:30.

The Program for Women in Health Sciences is a demonstration project funded by the Office of Health Resources Opportunity, HEW. It creates university level health career development and women's continuing education programs as well as special community education projects that serve as models for other medical sciences schools throughout the country.

The program works closely with the San Francisco Women's Health Center, the Coalition for the Medical Rights of Women, and the YWCA in presenting community health education programs.

For registration information write to Velma Parness at UCSF Program for Women in Health Sciences, 1343 3rd Ave., San Francisco, 94143, or call 666-1979.

UCSF Volunteers

The UCSF Hospital Volunteers would welcome new members to help them respond to patient and visitor needs at Moffitt and UC Hospitals. Salespersons are needed for the gift shop; receptionists for the information desk; patient escorts; bookmobile and gift cart distributors; clerical workers; and hosts for the Intensive Care Unit.

Those wishing to volunteer should call Sharon Beckham UCSF Volunteer Coordinator at 666-1196.

Dental Screening at Dudley Stone

Kindergarten students at Dudley Stone School are receiving dental health education and services through the UCSF Schools of Nursing and Dentistry.

Margo Schmitz, a graduate student in the Nurse Specialist and School Health Program, volunteers one day a week at Dudley Stone to prepare the young students for dental screening examinations.

The screening is done by the entire senior class in dental hygiene in the Division of General Dentistry. Under the 11-week Community Health Methods course, taught by Dr. Steven J. Silverstein, students offer dental health education and screening to the children and then give follow-up care suggestions to Margo and the school's medical social worker.

The program, which is eight years old, works with children in all grades at Dudley Stone and sends dental hygiene students to Alameda County to work in its Smilemobile, to Emeryville schools, to Paul Revere School in San Francisco, and to San Francisco's Recreation Center for the Handicapped.

Margo's work at Dudley Stone is primarily health education. She is learning physical assessment skills which she plans to put into practice very soon. These skills will enable her to study a child's medical history and present physical condition to determine if there are any specific health problems.

Another upcoming component of the program is nutrition education for the children and their parents. Stacy Peterson and Joan Horbiak, UCSF hospital dietetic interns, will conduct about four nutrition classes a month, which will include talks on vegetables and fruits, and nutritional alternatives to sugar-filled snacks.

The total program is part of an effort by UCSF to make the campus a health education resource to San Francisco schools. It is coordinated, under the direction of Tom Gwyn, through the Office of Public Service Programs.
